121458... Melanoma, the most dangerous

... particularly in the age group of 15-19 years, by approximately 2% each year. The ... National Cancer Institute estimates that approximately 500 children in America are

121458... diagnosed each year. Additionally, a study published in the Journal of Investigative Dermatology contained a comprehensive genomic analysis of pediatric melanoma - finding unique genomic features for each of the three subtypes (discussed below) of pediatric melanoma - and suggests compelling evidence that UV exposure may play more of a role than initially thought in this disease, primarily regarding conventional pediatric melanoma.

121459 Pediatric melanomas are often divided into three categories:

121460 <ul>

121461 <li>Conventional Melanoma (CM): Pediatric CM is rarely diagnosed before puberty. Clinically, CM in younger patients shows several similarities to adult melanoma, including evidence of UV-induced DNA damage and similar UV-induced mutations (such as the BRAF mutation).</li>

121462 <li>Spitzoid Melanoma (SM): Spitzoid Melanomas are often nodular in nature, round in shape and uniform in color. Therefore, SM does not typically follow the commonly used ABCDE guide to diagnosing melanoma. Additionally, SMs often lack common adult melanoma genetic mutations (such as BRAF or NRAS). When first discovered in 1948 by Sophie Spitz, SMs were described as "melanomas of childhood".</li>

121463 <li>Congenital Melanocytic Nevus (CNM): A CNM is a large, pigmented mole or birthmark that is present at birth. Current research suggests approximately 5-10% of CNM cases develop into melanoma.</li>

121464 </ul>

121465 We are currently compiling an album of pictures of pediatric melanomas to help parents learn what to look for. If you would like to submit a photo of your child's melanoma, please email it to education@melanoma.org.

121466 <h2>Causes and Risk Factors</h2>

121467 Causes and risk factors for conventional pediatric melanoma (CM) appear to be similar to that of adult melanoma. Children with fair skin, light hair and freckles are at higher risk. Nearly 90% of adult melanomas are thought to be linked to UV exposure. Similarly, current research indicates that CM has genomic similarities to adult melanoma - such as UV-induced DNA damage and UVA-induced mutations. However, some pediatricians and pediatric oncologists are noticing that children with darker pigmented skin and skin that is less sun-sensitive are being diagnosed with melanoma, especially under the age of 13. No clear cause is known for spitzoid melanoma (SM) or congenital melanocytic nevi (CNM). Like adult melanoma, the development of pediatric melanoma, especially SM, is likely a combination of genetic predisposition and other unknown triggers, but no one knows for sure at this time.

121468 Children who have been treated for melanoma are at an increased risk of recurrence later in life, making lifelong skin checks, follow-up with an experienced medical oncologist and other prevention methods very important. It is clear that fighting melanoma must start with prevention efforts, public awareness efforts, behavior modification and attitude changes toward sun safety and overall sun exposure. It's never too early, or too late, to protect your skin or your child's skin from harmful UV rays. Do you have concerns or questions about sunscreen?
